GENETIC BASES OF HEARING LOSS: FUTURE TREATMENT IMPLICATIONS

- Luis Escobar, Michelle Wagner-Escobar

The current advances in molecular genetics have provided us the etiologic explanation of a good number of human disorders including hearing loss. The information available is complex and in the future may elucidate the mechanisms of human disease which will be the bases of future treatment. We propose to review during this session the molecular basis of hearing loss and how it will influence treatment in the future, it is possible that pharmacogenetics will play an important role in the correction of hearing loss in selected situations. The audience should be able to recognize clinical situations in which molecular mechanisms can be cited as etiologic factors of hearing loss and determine the best course of action to provide proper care of individuals with hearing loss. We will review current experimental treatment of hearing loss by modification of gene expression and function.
